

Organizational Psychology

Anirban Mukherjee, Ph.D.
Rajiv Gandhi Institute of Petroleum Technology
Jais, UP-229304
India

Narcissism

- The term is from the Greek mythology of Narcissus, a man so vain and proud he fell in love with his own image.
- Higher sense of self-importance, requires excessive admiration, has a sense of entitlement, and is arrogant.
- Because narcissist want to gain admiration of others, they tend to talk down those who threaten them or treat others as if they are inferiors.
- Narcissists tend to be selfish and exploitative and believe others exist for their own benefit.

Emotional Intelligence

- Refers to the extent to which people are self-aware, can manage their emotions, can motivate themselves, express empathy for others, and possess social skills.
- Can be described as follows:
 - ✓ Self-Awareness: Refers to the person's capacity of being aware of how they are feeling.
 - ✓ Managing Emotions: This refers to a person's capacity to balance anxiety, fear, and anger so that they do not overly interfere with getting things accomplished.

Emotional Intelligence

- ✓ Motivating Oneself: This dimension refers to a person's ability to remain optimistic and to continue striving in the face of feedback, barriers, and failures.
- ✓ Empathy: Refers to a person's ability to understand how others are feeling even without being explicitly told.
- ✓ Social skills: This refers to a person's ability to get along with others and to establish positive relationships.

Sigmund Freud

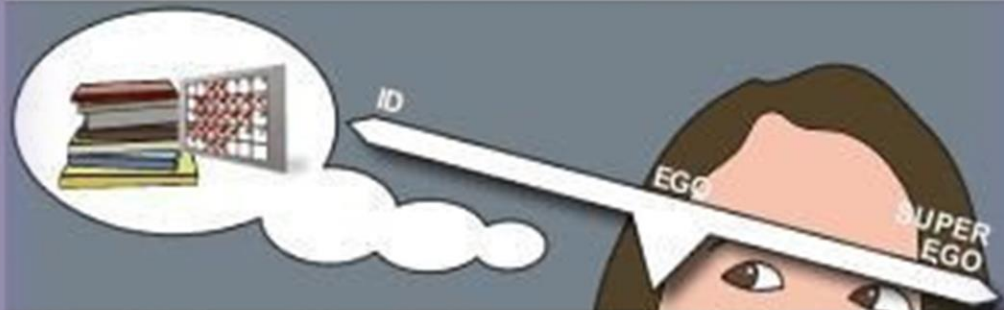

- Three levels of personality: Id, Ego, and Superego
- Id-Instinct based and is present in us since birth. It is unconscious and free. Examples: greed, love, hatred, hedonism, etc. Its mantra is pleasure, avoiding pain, and not bothering about the consequences.
- Ego-The part of your personality that is practical, rational, and logical, as it functions on the reality principle. Ego maintains a perfect balance between the Id and Superego; if controlled, one will have a balanced personality.
- Superego-It represents the highest moral and ethical values of the society, religion or faith one follows.

Dynamic equilibrium

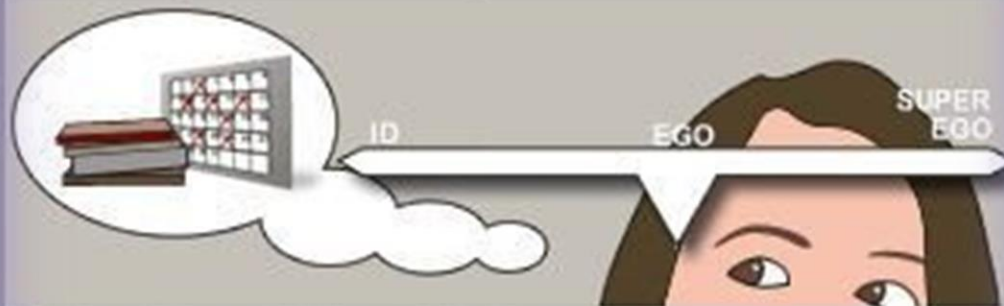

Exams are approaching. Should you

Do no revision and socialise

Do nothing but revision, having no rest or relaxation

Revise with a realistic revision timetable